I'm going to tell you a story about the first device I ever lost. It was a mkey modem unlock key v2 0, an item of digital hardware that had been loaned to me for streaming some TV shows on my computer. Lost, I was not. In fact, this particular piece of equipment never left my sight from the moment it hit the ground until it resurfaced later that day in a completely different place – and with no damage whatsoever – still slotted into its original slot among all of my other peripherals. Of course, the mkey modem unlock key had a purpose. That purpose was to unlock my laptop keyboard – a major convenience for a writer who spends a significant portion of his time on the job hunched over his keyboard. I spent many days hunched over my laptop keyboard, happily typing away on-screen as if the words were emerging directly from my mouth, but all I was doing was playing around with buttons to achieve nothing more than decorative effect. During those days of lost mkey modem unlock key v2 0, I was working on an early draft of this post. Often lost text is found again by happy accident. Such was the case with my lost mkey modem unlock key v2 0. I typed the first title. It was only about half finished, but it seemed like a good one, so I saved it as a draft, and then stopped writing for the day. I returned to my computer the following morning to continue working on my draft. I tried to recall what had gone wrong with it earlier, but could not recall any details because there had been no problems with it at all. But somehow – maybe because there should be nothing unexpected in life – this time around I found myself stumped again when trying to finish up the first few paragraphs of my draft. If only I had that mkey modem unlock key v2 0, I thought to myself. It would be so nice to have it back again. I wished only for the return of my mkey modem unlock key. My laptop keyboard was totally useless without it – and my computer likewise – and, like a good little writer, I hunched over my keyboard and continued to write. But there was no inspiration in what I wrote – and there was nothing for me to do about it either – because the mkey modem unlock key v2 0 had not yet been found again by luck or design, whichever way you want to look at it. No surprise there. The mkey modem unlock key v2 0 was nowhere to be found – and there was no obvious way to track it down – because I had never bothered to try. What might have helped me locate my lost mkey modem unlock key v2 0 at that time? It would not have been a GPS tracking system – but a Mobile Phone Locator would have done the trick, since the mkey modem unlock key was always with me, as I said earlier.
